The Compromise

In 2014, the IFAW and the Canadian government reached a compromise that ended the commercial seal hunt in Canada. The compromise was the result of years of negotiation and mediation. The compromise included a number of concessions from both sides.

The IFAW agreed to drop its legal challenges to the seal hunt. The Canadian government agreed to ban the commercial seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and to reduce the number of seals that could be killed in other areas.

The compromise was a significant victory for the IFAW. It marked the end of the commercial seal hunt in Canada and it set a precedent for future negotiations between animal welfare groups and governments.
