The Basics of Local Government

Local government is the level of government that is closest to the people. It is responsible for providing essential services such as police and fire protection, water and sewer service, and garbage collection. Local governments also regulate land use, zoning, and building codes.

There are many different types of local governments, including cities, towns, villages, and counties. Each type of government has its own unique powers and responsibilities. The structure of local government also varies from state to state.

How Local Government Works

Local governments are typically headed by a mayor or county executive. The mayor or county executive is responsible for overseeing the day-to-day operations of government and for implementing policies. The mayor or county executive is also the public face of the government.

Local governments also have a legislative body, which is responsible for making laws. The legislative body is typically made up of a city council or county board of supervisors. The legislative body also has the power to approve or reject the budget.

How to Get Involved

There are many ways to get involved in local politics. You can:

- Attend city council or county board meetings
