In literature, flowers and plants have played a vital role in some of the most iconic love stories ever written. In Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, the lovers exchange flowers as tokens of their affection. In Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice, Elizabeth Bennet's love for Mr. Darcy is revealed through her fondness for roses. And in Emily Brontë's Wuthering Heights, the passionate love between Heathcliff and Catherine is symbolized by the blooming heather on the moors.

In the Garden of Love is a lush and evocative exploration of the intertwined worlds of literature and botany, where flowers and plants become metaphors for love, passion, and desire. Author Sarah Jane Humphrey takes readers on a journey through the gardens of some of the world's most beloved authors, from the romantic poets of the 19th century to the modern-day masters of fiction. Along the way, she explores the hidden meanings behind some of our favorite flowers and plants, and reveals how they have been used to express the full range of human emotions.
