The National Security Council (NSC) is a key body in the United States government, responsible for advising the President on national security and foreign policy. The NSC is composed of the President, Vice President, Secretary of State, Secretary of Defense, and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The NSC also includes a number of other senior officials, such as the National Security Advisor, the Director of National Intelligence, and the Chairman of the Homeland Security Council.

The NSC was created in 1947 by the National Security Act. The act was passed in response to the perceived need for a more coordinated approach to national security policymaking. The NSC was tasked with providing the President with "advice on the integration of domestic, foreign, and military policies relating to the national security."

The NSC has played a major role in American foreign policy since its creation. The NSC was responsible for developing the Truman Doctrine, which committed the United States to supporting free peoples resisting communism. The NSC also played a key role in the development of the Marshall Plan, which provided economic aid to Europe after World War II.
