6 WAYS TO IMPROVE SCHOOL CULTURE

Build relationships. Kids don't care what you know until they know that you care.

Set clear expectations. Agree on a basic set of behavioral expectations for your entire school and communicate those expectations to all students and staff all the time.

Teach processes. When you want students to do something, teach them the steps it will take to get there, and repeat them until students have internalized the process.

Praise students for good choices. Compliment the specific behaviors you are looking to reinforce.

Keep things small. Kids are going to make mistakes. Avoid escalating small mistakes into big confrontations. Take a few minutes away from the situation, if necessary, so you can respond calmly, instead of in the heat of the moment.

Be patient. It takes time for students to master new behaviors and social skills. Think about it in terms of sports. You're not going to get upset because the first time you pitch to a kid, he strikes out. You're going to keep pitching over and over again.
